

Dear friends, colleagues, and members of SHARE Society,

Something important is happening and we all feel it. Nobody is above or beyond this, but there are also good perspectives and outcomes from this situation.

We understand better how much we depend on each other, regardless of what we do or where we are. We care for each other much more than we usually do. We see better how our lives are wired and seamed in the same fabric. We rediscover home and family. We reinvent work and trust and other important things.

SHARE Society was built in years, bringing together people interested in architecture, with many champions of this sector. Conferences and meetings were the most enjoyed way of sharing.

Now we have to stop for a moment. However, it seems that we need to share knowledge and ideas now more than ever.

We want to develop and discover new ways to harvest the amazing collection of architectural thinking and imagination we have now in our network.

This is the time for sharing.

Stay around architecture and take care. You all contribute to SHARE.

..i've seen it before

A visual journey around the world through different contexts by Laurian Ghinițoiu

During the past 100 days, we have been overwhelmed with a completely new vocabulary with terms as "pandemic", "social distancing", "lockdown" or "quarantine" etc. Although most people didn't experience any of those concepts, the unlucky one have seen it before. Laurian Ghinițoiu will be our special guest during the April webinars.

Post-Pandemic Architecture

Call for futuristic visions toward architecture and the city during the pandemic condition

The world is changing, changes that disrupt previous relationships and naturally change the future of the city and architecture. Today, architects face some of these changes and prepare themselves for the future. This is a pause that suddenly stops the world and attempts to disrupt many definitions.

I think it's time for architects to emerge in their historical role as planners and, as they have accepted this role at various stages of history, it is time to start theorizing the conditions of being and acting in the vague future.

How do architects play their historical role today?

What is the vision of the future of the city and architecture?

What is the mission of the architects in this new era?
